Tory Candidate Jurij Klufas noted the importance of the Conservative Party's announcement on immigration today. Stephen Harper, leader of the Conservative Party of Canada, announced a plan to recognize credentials and reduce landing fees.

“ New immigrants to our community – and they number in the thousands – tell me again and again that one of the most difficult challenges is getting their credential recognized.

“ We have highly skilled individuals who are frustrated by the need to find work other than that for which they have been trained.

“ The creation of a Canadian Agency for Assessment and Recognition of Credentials is an essential tool to fix that problem.

“ The Conservative Party has become the party of immigrants – more and more new Canadians who, like me, came to this country to seek opportunity, freedom, and a hopeful future for their families see these things best assured in the Conservative Party of Canada.

“ In Parkdale - High Park, we are trying to reach out to as many new Canadians as possible – in the Polish community, the Vietnamese community, the Filipino community, the Tibetan community, the Ukrainian community and many others in order to tell them about the Conservative Party of Canada, and how it can help them and their families.

As Mr Harper said, hard-working new Canadians bring to Canada a strong work ethic, a commitment to family life, an appreciation for higher education, and a respect for law and order. These are Canadian values, these are Conservative values, and these are values that we will bring to a new Conservative government.
